

Audience Theories

There are 3 audience theories which are: The Hypodermic Model, Encoding and Decoding Model, Uses and gratification Theory.

The Hypodermic Model suggests that an audience responds to a media text in the same way. This model is still relevant today because people buy new products such as the iPhone whenever a new one is released. Movie franchises can also be a part of it, for example, Harry Potter.

In the Encoding and Decoding Model the producer encodes text or meaning and the audience decodes the text or meaning. According to Stuart Hall, the audience responds to a media text in different ways. 3 different readings might be decoded by the audience dependant on who they are as people: Preferred, negotiated and oppositional.

In the Uses and Gratification Theory it is suggested that the audience responds to texts for different purposes. These purposes can be:

Diversion – escape from everyday problems and routine. Glee and The Flash.

Personal relationships – using the media for emotional and other interaction.

Personal identity – finding yourself reflected in texts learning behaviour and values from texts.

Surveillance – Information which could be useful for living.

Fight Club

Directed by: David Fincher

Written by: Chuck Palahniuk (Book) Jim Uhls (Screenplay)

Starring: Brad Pitt, Edward Norton, Helena Bonham Carter.

Released: 1999

Fight Club is about an office worker who has insomnia and he is looking to change his life. While on a flight he crosses paths with a soap maker and together they form an underground fight club. This fight club is where different men can fight each other recreationally.

Alexander Walker who was a critic of the London Evening Standard had this to say about the film 'A toxic experience, an admissible assault on personal decency, and on society itself. It resurrects the Fuhrer principle. It promotes pain and suffering as the virtues of the strongest, it tramples every democratic decency underfoot.' This is obviously a clear sign that Alexander didn't like the film at all.

When the film was sent into the BBFC it was requested that it should be rated an 18. It was seen by pretty much everyone at the BBFC including the director.
