

HOW TO WRITE A GOOD MOTIVATION LETTER

WHAT IS A MOTIVATION LETTER & A PERSONAL STATEMENT? WHAT'S THE DIFFERENCE?

A motivation letter explains the reason why you, as an applicant, would be the perfect candidate for a university's program/scholarship to which you are applying. It requires detailed research into the university's general academic environment and different programs from the student's part. Commonly speaking, the applicant would often mention his/her qualifications and achievements in the past few years in a motivation letter.

A personal statement requires you to present yourself as a living, breathing person behind stacks of transcripts and applications. Think of yourself as a reality TV show contestant and the judges are the admission office at your desired university. Often, the contestants will usually tell inspirational stories about themselves to impress the judges in order to have a chance to stay till the final round. Likewise, you need to describe to your university about what kind of a person you are and what happened in your life that led you to apply to this university. It also serves as an informal 'guarantee' that you will not be a future detriment to your university and that you will fit into the university life just fine.

To some extent, a well-written motivation letter and a personal statement are almost interchangeable since both serve the same purpose of maximizing the student's chances to be admitted/ to be considered as a strong candidate.

However, the main focus of a motivation letter is relatively more 'practical', which requires the student to be more realistic while listing out his/her past achievements, qualifications and goals. Meanwhile, a personal statement emphasizes on more 'vague' things such as personality, ambitions and preferences.

Motivation letter tips for students in Finland

The opening line of a motivation letter should always state your purpose of application along with a following line introducing yourself.

You can also combine the two lines in the form of 'I am a xxx-year xxx major student/graduate at xxx university and I am writing this to apply for xxx.'

The final line can be in various forms, e.g. a brief summary of your current state, what intrigued you to apply or how is this application related to your current state.
