

Chapter 32 – Electrostatics

32.1 Electricity

1. What does it mean for a rod to be “electrically charged”?

Electrostatics is the branch of physics that deals with electric charges that are at rest. When a rod is charged, it means that it has a net electric charge. This charge can be either positive or negative, depending on the type of material it is made of and how it is charged. For example, a rod made of a material that is a good conductor of electricity will have a net charge that is equal to the sum of the positive and negative charges on its surface.

2. Why does the ground become a better conductor than the ground itself? How does ground become a better electrical conductor?

The ground is a better conductor than the ground itself because it has a much larger surface area. This means that there are many more positive and negative charges on the ground than there are on a small rod. As a result, the ground is a much better conductor of electricity than the rod.

32.2 Electric Charges

1. Which part of an atom is positively charged, and which is part is negatively charged?

The protons in the nucleus of an atom are positively charged, and the electrons are negatively charged.

2. How does the charge of one electron compare with the charge of another electron? How does it compare with the charge of a proton?

The charge of one electron is equal in magnitude to the charge of another electron, but opposite in sign. The charge of a proton is equal in magnitude to the charge of an electron, but opposite in sign.

3. What is the total charge of the net charge of an atom?

The total charge of an atom is zero.

32.3 Conservation of Charge

1. What is a positive rod? Is negative rod?

A positive rod is a rod that has a net positive charge. A negative rod is a rod that has a net negative charge. The total charge of the rod is equal to the sum of the positive and negative charges on its surface.
