The Elements of Statistical Learning

Trevor Hastie
Robert Tibshirani
Jerome Friedman

During the past decade, there has been an explosion in computational and administrative tools, and this, in turn, has led to a renaissance of interest in statistics, particularly in machine learning and data mining. The challenge of understanding these data has led to the development of new tools in the field of statistics and applied data science such as linear learning, machine learning, and regularization. Many of these tools have common underpinnings for an efficient approach to data analysis and prediction. This book describes the important ideas in these areas of a common conceptual framework. While the approach is statistical, the emphasis is on concepts rather than mathematics. Many exercises are given, with a third set of more challenging exercises for a graduate course. The authors are also interested in determining in which situations the tools provided in this book are superior to traditional approaches to data analysis. The book is written in a style that is both accessible and rigorous. It is suitable for a graduate course in statistics and machine learning, as well as for a course in data mining and machine learning. The book is also suitable for a course in applied statistics, machine learning, and data mining. The book is a comprehensive treatment of the topic in one book.

The authors are well-known in their fields and are also in the forefront, including practical methods, machine learning, statistical learning, and data mining. It is a good reference for the field, and a good source for researchers and practitioners. There is also a chapter on methods for "real" data (e.g., large data sets), including multiple testing and data visualization.

Trevor Hastie, Robert Tibshirani, and Jerome Friedman are professors of statistics at Stanford University. They are prominent researchers in the area of machine learning and statistical learning, particularly in the area of data mining. Hastie is a member of the National Academy of Sciences and a member of the National Academy of Engineering. Tibshirani is a member of the National Academy of Sciences and a member of the National Academy of Engineering. Friedman is a member of the National Academy of Sciences and a member of the National Academy of Engineering. The authors are also interested in determining in which situations the tools provided in this book are superior to traditional approaches to data analysis. The book is written in a style that is both accessible and rigorous. It is suitable for a graduate course in statistics and machine learning, as well as for a course in data mining and machine learning. The book is a comprehensive treatment of the topic in one book.
