A client's infusion of normal saline infiltrated earlier today, and approximately 500 ml of saline infused into the subcutaneous tissue. The client is now complaining of excruciating arm pain and demanding "stronger pain medications". What initial action is most important for the nurse to take?

- a. Ask about any past history of drug abuse or addiction.
- b. Measure the pulse volume and capillary refill distal to the infiltration.
- c. Compress the infiltrated tissue to measure the degree of edema.
- d. Evaluate the extent of ecchymosis over the forearm area.

ANS B - Measure the pulse volume and capillary refill distal to the infiltration. Pain and diminished pulse volume (B) are signs of compartment syndrome, which can progress to complete loss of the peripheral pulse in the extremity. Compartment syndrome occurs when external pressure (usually from a cast), or internal pressure (usually from subcutaneous infused fluid), exceeds capillary perfusion pressure resulting in decreased blood flow to the extremity.

A nurse is administering medications through a nasogastric tube (NGT) which is connected to suction. After ensuring correct tube placement, what action should the nurse take next?

- a. Clamp the tube for 20 minutes
- b. Flush the tube with water.
- c. Administer the medications.
- d. Crush the tablets and dissolve in sterile water.

ANS B - Flush the tube with water. The NGT tube should be flushed before, after and in between each medication administered. (B). Once all medications are administered, the NGT should be clamped for 20 minutes.

Which intervention is most important for the nurse to implement for a male client who is experiencing urinary retention?

- A. Apply a condom catheter.
- B. Apply a skin protectant.
- C. Encourage increased fluid intake.
- D. Assess for bladder distention.

ANS D - Assess for bladder distention. Urinary retention is the inability to void all urine collected in the bladder, which leads to uncomfortable bladder distension.
