

CHEMICAL BONDS

IONIC, COVALENT, & METALLIC

FORMS OF CHEMICAL BONDS
Bonding: ionic, covalent, metallic

1. Ionic bonding: transfer of electrons from one atom to another, resulting in oppositely charged ions that attract each other.

2. Covalent bonding: sharing of electron pairs between atoms.

3. Metallic bonding: delocalized electrons in a lattice of positive metal ions.

CHEMICAL BONDS AND QUANTUM MECHANICS

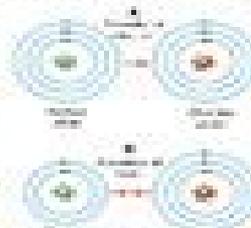

Quantum mechanics explains the behavior of atoms and molecules at the atomic level. It shows that electrons do not orbit the nucleus in simple paths but exist in probability clouds called orbitals. The energy levels of these orbitals determine the types of chemical bonds that can form.

Diagram illustrating the formation of an ionic bond between a sodium atom (Na) and a chlorine atom (Cl). The sodium atom has one valence electron, and the chlorine atom has seven valence electrons. The sodium atom loses its valence electron to the chlorine atom, resulting in a sodium cation (Na⁺) and a chloride anion (Cl⁻).

Diagram illustrating the formation of a covalent bond between two hydrogen atoms (H). Each hydrogen atom has one valence electron. The two atoms share their valence electrons, resulting in a hydrogen molecule (H₂).

Diagram illustrating the formation of a metallic bond. A lattice of positive metal ions is surrounded by a sea of delocalized electrons.
