

Facets Messages

Facets displays four different types of messages:

Information Messages

Visually identified by a blue icon with the letter 'I' inside, information messages tell you the results of the command you just chose. They are "FYI" in nature; that is, they are for informational purposes only. When an information message pops up, Facets asks you to acknowledge it by clicking OK or Yes.

Question Messages

Visually identified by a green sign with a question mark, question messages ask you to confirm the action you just chose before you can proceed. When a question message pops up, Facets waits for you to answer it by clicking the appropriate response button.

Warning Messages

Visually identified by a yellow sign with an exclamation mark, warning messages alert you to an error or situation that requires you to make some sort of decision and/or input before proceeding. Warning messages are more severe than information and question messages because they pop up when you choose an action with potentially destructive or irreversible consequences.

Error / Critical Messages

Visually identified by a red stop sign, error messages (also referred to as critical messages) alert you to serious system-related or application-related problems that must be corrected before you can continue working in Facets. Error messages will disable you from continuing your work before resolution of the error. Often, after you click OK to acknowledge an error message, Facets will close the application and you will need to open it again to continue your work.
